

Mrs. Grace Dini of Tinley Dies Suddenly After Major Operation

The entire Tinley Park community was greatly shocked and deeply grieved last Sunday morning when the news came that Mrs. Grace Dini had died at three o'clock the same morning in the Ingalls Memorial hospital in Harvey following a major operation on the Wednesday previous. She had withstood the operation apparently quite well and on Saturday the reports were that she was improving nicely, and when a few hours later the news came that she had passed away it came as a big shock to the community.

Grace Dini nee Brayton was born in Ashkum, Illinois, March 23, 1888 and grew up to young womanhood under the influence of a Christian family and the Christian church. Her devoutly Christian mother had much to do with the moulding of Mrs. Dini's character.

Having graduated from the public school of her home town, she went to Indianapolis, Indiana, when 18 years of age and entered a training school for nurses. She finished her course with credit and served as a nurse for some time in one of the Indianapolis hospitals.

A little later she went to Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, where she took a course in embalming and became a licensed undertaker.

In the fall 1911 she came to Chicago. She served as a nurse a short time in a Kankakee, Ill., hospital and secured a position as nurse in the hospital of the famous Doctor J. Murphy.

While in Chicago she became acquainted with Guido Dini. They were united in marriage April 9, 1915. In 1919 Mr. and Mrs. Dini came to Tinley Park and made it their permanent home.

Nine years ago they opened an ice cream parlor and confectionary store of which Mrs. Dini had entire charge. In this business she had the opportunity of meeting many people and thus forming a large circle of acquaintances and friends.

Mrs. Dini represented the Tinley Park Times as local business manager ever since its inception 6 years ago. Everybody who had the privilege of knowing Mrs. Dini found her to be a sun-shiny soul, full of cheer and good will toward all she met. Her friends confided in her and sought her advice in the perplexities of life. She was benevolent and kind and assisted whom she could. No one was turned down at her door in vain quest for help. She sought to carry out the greatest of all commandments to love God above all else, by loving her neighbor as herself. And as a result she and her husband enjoyed a happy family life. She was an invaluable helpmate to him, sharing with him the burdens and cares which encounter us all on life's journey, with a cheerful and loving heart.

At the tender age of 11 years she felt the call of her Savior and in testimony of her faith in Him joined the Congregational church at that time.

It was her constant effort to live the faith she professed and viewing her life in the light of what she was and did, she glorified her Master by being a blessing to her friends and neighbors.

During the past year she became afflicted with a serious malady, which finally compelled her to submit to a major operation in the Ingalls Memorial Hospital, Harvey, on Wednesday, Jan. 31st.

She had ardent hopes to fully recover her health and had laid all her plans as to the carrying on of her work on her return, but it was not to be. At three o'clock in the morning of Sunday, Feb. 4th she quietly passed into that other life. Her life's journey extended over a period of 45 years, 10 months and 11 days.

There remain to mourn her untimely departure, her bereaved husband, Guido Dini, two brothers, Lloyd and Earl Brayton and one sister, Mrs. Helen Lanham and many other relatives and friends.

The body laid in state in Andres hall over Monday night to Tuesday afternoon. Following a brief service at the hall at 1:30 p. m. Tuesday the services were concluded at the Tinley Park M. E. church with the pastor, Rev. Chas. H. Hedler officiating. The edifice was far too small to hold the large number of friends who came to pay their last tributes of respect. The floral tributes were profuse and beautiful.

Mrs. Joe Andres and daughter Ruth sang.

Burial took place in the Tinley Park cemetery.

She is gone but not forgotten and will be missed greatly.

Mokena Fire Dept., Called to Marley

A big gob of burning soot falling on the shingle roof of the J. W. Day residence in Marley about ten o'clock Monday night, started a roof fire. A bucket brigade was quickly formed and a call sent in for the Mokena Fire Department who promptly responded with their fire truck. The fire was extinguished before any serious damage resulted. This makes three out of town fires the Mokena Fire Department has been called out to in the past few months.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT OF CANDIDACY

Mokena, Illinois, Feb. 8, 1934.

Friends: In the present sublime emergency my mind reverts to the theme of my mother's favorite hymn "We Shall Know Each Other Better When The Mists Have Rolled Away".

We know each other better than we know ourselves. This God given attribute creates human sympathy. Knowing each others needs and necessities we are unselfishly able to create, perpetuate and administer the tenets of self government. Were this not true, the whole theory of government "of, for and by the people" were a falacy.

Some of us "feather our nests" at others expense. Most of us share up on the "live and let live" principle of equal rights and privileges.

I am prompted in presenting myself as a candidate for the state senate by a sense of responsibility, of duty I owe to my Creator, and to my fellowman by a desire to do and to reap my reward from the knowledge of accomplishment.

You and I are going to the State Capitol the home of our collective best thought and energy to reason together for mutual interest in establishment. Unless we can go together it were better for us had we staid at home.

Public interests must not be exploited for private gain. Come on let's go.

Yours Fraternally,

DON C. HALL

Quotas of downstate counties have been cut from 112,374 to 100,000 and the working hours will be cut 50 per cent. The new quotas were necessitated because the appropriation for the CWA throughout the country is nearing exhaustion.

After a secret vigilance committee of a Methodist Bible class had operated an ostensible gambling house in Mount Vernon and unearthed conditions described as "open, notorious, and a public scandal," the biggest police shakeup in the city's history took place. Mark D. Stiles, former president of the Mount Vernon Trust company, resigned from the post of commissioner of public safety, which he had held for five years. Mr. Stiles asserted that Chief Inspector Michael I. Silverstein, Detective William Day, formerly in charge of the local prohibition enforcement squad, and J. O. M. The raids were made in Posen, Dixmoor, Blue Island, and Tinley Park.

Sentences of life imprisonment were meted out by a jury in Chicago to Gail E. Swolley, Peoria saloonkeeper, and Frank B. Souder, Benton gambler and bootlegger, for the kidnaping of James B. Hackett, former Blue Island gambling boss.

Chicago police learned when they visited the Germania Safe Deposit and Trust company to recover $11,000 taken January 17 in a holdup of the State Bank of Nauvoo, that a man believed to have been Robert Wilson, a member of the bandit gang, had preceded them by an hour and taken part of the money from a safe deposit box which he had rented. They recovered $6,200 of the loot in the safety vault, however, and got $800 more from an automobile dealer who sold a car to one of the bandits. BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

BUSTER BEAR IS PIGGISH

NOW, wouldn't you suppose that when there is plenty for everybody, everybody would be contented and happy? But often, altogether too often, it isn't so at all. The more folks have, the more they want. And there are other folks who, no matter how much they have, seem to think that others may be having something better, and instead of making the most of what they have, go about trying to get what their neighbors have.

It seemed, it really did, that there were enough of those queer three-sided little brown nuts under the beech trees for everybody to have all he could eat, and that that beech-nut picnic that beautiful October morning should be the merriest, happiest kind of a picnic. But it wasn't. No, sir, it wasn't. The reason was the piggishness of Buster Bear.

"These Nuts Are Mine, All Mine," He Roared.

When Buster arrived under the beech trees and saw so many others gathered there for the very same purpose that had brought him there, he right away let selfishness get the best of him. He was greedy, was Buster Bear. He was so greedy that he couldn't bear to see anyone else get a single one of those little brown sweet nuts, although he knew well enough that he couldn't eat all of them to save his life. Right away he began to growl, and you know his growl is deep and grumbly-rumbly and not at all pleasant to hear.

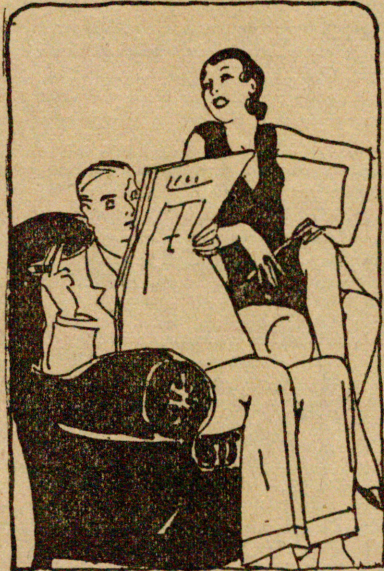

Those who were nearest him moved off a little farther, but went right on picking up those brown, sweet little nuts. Buster Bear growled more and his growl was deeper and more grumbly-rumbly. All the other little people looked at him anxiously, but kept right on hunting for those brown sweet little nuts. Then Buster Bear quite lost his temper.

"These nuts are mine, all mine," he roared.

Then he ran at Lightfoot the Deer.

Lightfoot bounded away, but not far. He knew that Buster Bear could not catch him, and he had no mind to leave those nuts. Then Buster rushed at the Gobbler family and all the Gobblers scurried away, each in a different direction, but they didn't go far. Then Buster rushed this way and rushed that way wherever he saw anyone picking up nuts.

Mrs. Grouse merely darted behind a fallen tree and the minute Buster's back was turned she was scratching over leaves in search of nuts again. Sammy Jay and Redhead the Woodpecker merely flew up in a tree. Chatterer the Red Squirrel and Happy Jack the Gray Squirrel and Unc' Billy and Mrs. Possum climbed the nearest trees. But they were back on the ground again as soon as Buster had turned away.

Peter Rabbit, who was hiding near to see all that went on, had to laugh. He couldn't help it. There was great big Buster Bear so piggish that he wanted all, yet getting hardly a taste because he was spending his time chasing his neighbors. It often is that way with piggish people. In trying to get more than their share they fail to get what they might have as well as not.

ON "THE GOOD OLD DAYS"

"IT IS the Thursday Lecture; in one sense, a day of public shame; the day on which transgressors who have made themselves liable to the minor severities of the Puritan law, receive their punishment. At this moment the constable has bound an idle fellow to the whipping-post and is giving him his deserts with a cat-o-nine-tails.

meeting-house with a halter about his neck, which he is condemned to wear visibly throughout his lifetime; Dorothy Talby is chained to a post at the corner of Prison-lane, with the hot sun blazing on her matronly face, and for no other offence than lifting her hand against her husband. Such are the profitable sights that serve the good people of the New England village to while away the earlier part of lecture-day.

That is a "bit" from one of Nathaniel Hawthorne's sketches of life in old New England. He goes on to describe an aged couple, John Proctor and his wife, Elizabeth, passing, in a company of other condemned prisoners, on their way to the execution place on Gallows Hill. "If there are two old people in the whole country," he says, "who seem to have led a true Christian life, it is this very pair. Yet it was sworn before the worshipful Chief Justice that they afflicted children in the nighttime." So to the gallows the good old couple go.

If you know anyone who casts a longing eye on romantic pictures of former times, who thinks we are unfortunate to be living in this day and age—anyone who decries modern times as giving less opportunity for happiness than "the good old days" of some period in the past—tell him or her to read up on the life of that period, not in dry history books, but in such pictures of daily living as these sketches by Hawthorne.

NOW we have come to the silvery years. Silver with vanished hopes, silver with tears, Silver with promises of silver dawns, When Death's silver chessmen take Life's silver pawns.

Now we have come to the silvery years. Silver my tresses, and silver appears Stealing the brown of your own pretty hair; The silver of winter is shimmering there.

Now we have come to the silvery years. The journey is ending, the shadowed path clears, And over the top of the silvery hill The bright silver moon of our love rises still!

HUMAN "REPAIR SHOPS"

The modern hospital is a human repair shop; it is not a mere lodging for sick people. The modern hospital is a laboratory for the doctor, for here he has the use of facilities and equipment which he could never afford to own. Dr. J. H. J. Upham refers in an article in a recent issue of Hygeia, the health magazine, chiefly to these facilities for recognizing disease rather than to the well equipped operating rooms, the comfortable bedrooms and wards, and other special features of the modern hospital because he wishes to emphasize the fact that the first aim of the modern physician should be to ascertain what exactly is the matter with his patient, how much the organs are damaged and how much he can depend on the natural vital forces remaining.

SYNOPSIS

Waiting in the minister's study, Jim Franklin, about to be married to Doris Carmody, is stabbed to death. Callis Shipley, one of the bridesmaids, is obviously in a state of anxiety. Peter Cardigan, novelist, and amateur detective of some note, with Sergeant Kilday, of the New York police, begin the official investigation. Franklin, while waiting, had many visitors, among them his mistress, an actress, "Choo Choo" Train; his intended wife's father, Ambrose Carmody; her brother, Rylee; Daniel Bullis, well-known politician, and an unknown woman in a blue frock, who had quarreled openly with Franklin. Rylee Carmody admits trying to stop the wedding, after being informed by Webster Spears that Franklin was still friendly with Choo Choo, despite his approaching marriage. Kilday secures the dead man's keys. Callis Shipley is somewhat contradictory in her answers to questions, but the investigators learn nothing of importance. An interview with Daniel Bullis is also fruitless. Webster Spears admits informing Rylee Carmody of Franklin's relations with Choo Choo, for Doris Carmody's sake, in the hope of preventing the wedding. He and Doris had had a boy-and-girl love affair. Fletcher, Franklin's man-servant, is reticent.

"Then how does it happen you knew him?"

"He gave me his name, sir. Mr. Carmody seemed rather—er—flustered, you might say, sir. He told me who he was and said that it was important that he see Mr. Franklin at once."

"I see." Kilday leaned against the table, arms folded across his chest. "Who else was here?"

"Mr. Dunbar. He told me about the—about Mr. Franklin's death."

"Mr. Dunbar?" The detective weighed the name. "Milo Dunbar?"

"Yes, sir. He was Mr. Franklin's partner."

"When was he here?"

"This evening. About six o'clock, I think. He told me—"

"Yes, yes. I know," the sergeant interrupted. "But what did he want? He didn't come here just to tell you what had happened?"

Fletcher shrugged. "He was looking for Mr. Franklin's will. He said he was sure it was here, somewhere."

"Oh! And did he find it?"

"No, sir. There didn't seem to be any papers here of that nature."

"All right. Who else was here?" Kilday's manner was brusque.

Fletcher smoothed the thinning hair flat across his forehead with a careful hand. "I believe that was all, sir," he said.

"How about the telephone? Were there any messages?"

"Yes, sir. Mr. Daniel Bullis called several times, and left his number."

"When was that?"

"At various times, all day, sir. He began calling early this morning, and called repeatedly, from then on."

"When Mr. Franklin came in, during the afternoon, did you give him Mr. Bullis' messages?"

"Yes, sir. I told him he had called."

"What did Mr. Franklin say then?"

Fletcher shook his head dubiously. "Mr. Franklin didn't want to talk to Mr. Bullis," he said. "He turned to Mr. Royce and said, 'I guess I know what he wants,' and Mr. Royce said, 'Let him sweat, Jim.'"

"Then Mr. Franklin never called Mr. Bullis?"

"No, sir."

"Did Mr. Bullis phone again, after Franklin and Royce had left for the church?" Kilday's interest was obviously aroused.

"Yes, sir. Several times. I finally told him that Mr. Franklin couldn't be reached today. That he had already gone to the church, to be married. He didn't call after that."

The sergeant puffed his cigar in silence. Under his breath, Peter whistled tunelessly. Bullis had tried all day to see Jim Franklin, who knew what he wanted, but refused to talk to him. That was obvious, from the conversation Fletcher had overheard between Franklin and Nick Royce. But whether he wanted to or not, Franklin had seen Bullis—at the church. Not exactly a new lead, but an interesting sidelight to an old one. Royce knew why Bullis had been so anxious to see Franklin. Kilday resumed the questioning.

"Who else was here today, Fletcher?"

Once more the man brushed his forehead thoughtfully. "That's all, sir," he replied finally.

"You're sure?" The sergeant evidently didn't like the way the man hesitated over his replies. His manner was too guarded.

"I'm quite sure that was all," Fletcher replied. His round eyes blinked at the detective solemnly. "I have been here all day."

"How about Choo Choo Train?" Peter questioned for the first time. His voice was purposely harsh. He hoped to jar an admission from the man.

"She wasn't here today."

"Find Anything of Franklin's Will Yet, Mr. Dunbar?"

wring any damaging admission from him on the subject of women. For this he yielded him a reluctant admiration, but it did not lessen his impatience.

"Where did Mr. Franklin file his correspondence?" Kilday resumed the questioning. "Perhaps we can learn something there."

Fletcher led the way to a desk in the next room, which both the detective and the novelist searched, without success. Bills, they found, one from a florist which interested Kilday, until he perceived that the flowers had gone to Doris Carmody. There was also one personal note, penciled by Nick Royce, reminding Franklin of a luncheon engagement. Nothing else of a personal nature.

"Did Mr. Dunbar find anything at all?"

"Only what you see here, sir."

"Where else would we be apt to find his letters, Fletcher?" Peter faced the servant.

"I'm afraid these are the only personal papers he kept, sir."

"I'm. We'll have a look," said Kilday.

But though they searched the apartment thoroughly, room by room, Fletcher apparently had told the truth. Nowhere could they find any trace of personal correspondence which might yield them a clue to the identity of the mysterious woman in blue who had quarreled with Franklin in Doctor Abernathy's study, at or near the time of the murder.

When they left, Peter had a feeling that Fletcher, somehow or another, had outwitted them. Yet he was sure there had been no personal correspondence filed in that apartment.

Kilday glanced at his watch. It was ten o'clock. "Still too early to turn in," he said. "Suppose we go have a talk with Dunbar. He might be able to help us with this woman in blue. The least he can do is identify another key for us. One of these probably opens Franklin's office."

By looking in the telephone directory at a corner drug store, they discovered the slain man's partner lived nearby.

The attorney did not keep them waiting. "I'm glad you've come," he said in greeting, "if I can be of any help."

"You can, Mr. Dunbar. We're trying to locate the mysterious woman in blue, who visited Jim Franklin in Doctor Abernathy's study at about the time of the murder. You were there when the doctor described her. Does she fit any woman of your acquaintance?"

Dunbar smiled faintly. "I'm afraid there are too many women who wear blue, Sergeant. Can you describe her more fully?"

"Unfortunately," Kilday admitted. "Doctor Abernathy is the only one who saw her, and that's as much as we have to go on. However, as Franklin's partner, I thought you might be able to help us. At least, you might be able to give us a list of his women acquaintances, which would be of great value in the investigation."

"I'm sorry," and Dunbar looked as though he meant it, "but I'm afraid I will be of little help along that line. You see," he explained, "Jim's interests and mine were entirely different. We did not move in the same circles. As you probably know, he was quite a politician and a great mixer. That was his strong point. My forte was law. It didn't make a bad combination. Jim's wide association and popularity attracted many clients to the firm. My job was to handle the business, after he got it. Oh, of course," the attorney shrugged, "Jim wasn't a bad lawyer, and he handled some cases. But in the main, that end of the business was under my direction. The result was that in the past few years we have drifted farther and farther apart, socially."

"Of course, we were still warm friends, but our friendship did not extend beyond office hours. For that reason, I am scarcely in a position to help you, when it comes to his women acquaintances."

Peter found it rather difficult to put the next question to this calm, straight-eyed man. "You were aware, Mr. Dunbar, that there were certain—irregularities in Franklin's relationships with women?"

The attorney nodded slowly. "It was too bad," he said. "One great weakness in an otherwise strong character."

"But you don't know any of these women?"

Dunbar hesitated. "Yes. I knew of this actress—the one they call Choo Choo Train. I believe that affair was common knowledge. Jim made no secret of it. She—this woman—phoned him at the office this morning."

Peter showed his interest.

"Jim told me of it," Dunbar explained. "It seems that she was determined to attend the wedding. It was quite a social event, you know. Evidently this woman had certain ambitions along that line." He smiled faintly.

"Did Franklin tell you how he felt about that?" Kilday queried.

"Oh, yes. Of course he would not permit it. That was why she phoned. They quarreled about it. I believe Jim told me about it because it worried him."

"Then he hadn't broken off with this woman?" Peter made no effort to stifle his surprise.

Dunbar shook his head. "I think not. I believe his quarrel with Choo Choo Train, over a wedding invitation, was the first intimation he had that it was going to be difficult to play the dual role of lover and bridegroom."

"But Choo Choo was not the woman in blue?" It was not a question. Peter was merely thinking aloud. "That means there is bound to be another woman. She's the one we must find. Are you unable to give us even a hint as to her identity, Mr. Dunbar?"

"I'm sorry," the lawyer admitted. "I can't. Of course, I know there have been other women. Quite a number of them, in fact. But I'm afraid I can't be of any help in finding them."

Kilday appeared engrossed in the cigar he was lighting, and his voice was casual as he asked, "Find anything of Franklin's will yet, Mr. Dunbar?"

"Not yet. I have been to his apartment, but it wasn't there. I'll probably locate it at the office in the morning."

"You haven't looked there yet, then?"

"Not yet."

"And you didn't find anything else at the apartment—anything at all that might help us in our search for this other woman, Mr. Dunbar?"

"Not a thing, Sergeant. You might have a look at the apartment, though. As a matter of fact, I was only looking for the will. I might have overlooked something that would help you."

"I don't think you did," the detective replied ruefully. "We've already been there." He offered the key-ring for the attorney's inspection. "Can you identify any of these?"

"A couple of them are probably office keys," Dunbar replied, after a cursory examination. "I could tell, of course, by trying them."

"How about the little ones? Do they look like keys to the files there, or to his desk?"

The attorney shrugged. "I couldn't say," he admitted, "but if you'd like to try them for yourself—"

"I would," declared the detective. "Do you object to going to your office with us now?"

Milo Dunbar hesitated. "My wife isn't well," he said, "but if you think it would really help, of course I'll do it."

On the way down in Kilday's car, the detective explained the importance he attached to the identification of the keys. "And another thing," he added. "It's quite possible we may find some clue to the identity of the woman in blue, if we can locate Franklin's personal file. Somewhere, nearly every one has such a file—letters they want to save—memoranda of various nature—all sorts of things. Women save programs, and that sort of thing. With a man, it's more apt to be pictures. Either may keep letters. If we find Jim Franklin's file, it will be a big help."

Lesson for February 11

TIMELY WARNINGS (Temperance Lesson).

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 7:1-29.
GOLDEN TEXT—Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. Matthew 7:19.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Golden Rule. JUNIOR TOPIC—Keeping Jesus' Law. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Truth About Alcoholic Beverages. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Drastic Methods for a Deadly Evil.

I. Concerning Censorious Judgments (vv. 1-12).

1. The sin and folly of (vv. 1-5). This prohibition should not be so construed as to forbid our making an estimate of the lives of those about us, for "by their fruits ye shall know them." Neither should it prevent us from administering rebuke to those who deserve it. It is not wrong to condemn the errors and faults of those who are practicing sin; neither does it mean that sin should go unrebuked until we ourselves are perfect. It does definitely and vigorously rebuke readiness to blame others and to magnify their weaknesses and errors.

2. The duty of discrimination in dealing out holy things (v. 6). The gospel should be preached to all. The Word of God should be proclaimed to all, but at the same time it should be borne in mind that "dogs and swine" have no comprehension of holy things.

3. Qualification for discrimination (vv. 7-12).

a. A life of prayer (vv. 7-11). Only those are able rightly to divide the word of truth who live in close communion with God.

b. The disposition to treat others as one would be treated by others (v. 12). The Word of God and the common judgment of mankind constitute a definite standard of life so far as that standard bears on the principle governing the life. In all doubtful questions between man and man we should deal with our fellows as we would have them deal with us. In fact, the whole law concerning human relations is compressed into this one rule.

II. Entrance into the Kingdom (vv. 13, 14).

Before everyone there are set two ways and only two ways, life and death, heaven and hell. Two gates open out into these ways. The narrow gate is the way of life. The invitation is for all to enter this gate.

III. The Warning Against False Teachers (vv. 15-20).

1. Their real existence (v. 15). Ever since God had a people, false prophets and teachers have appeared among them. That they appear everywhere need not surprise us, for Christ foretold that such should arise.

2. Their nature (v. 15).

a. They are hypocritical. They are emissaries of Satan. The devil does his most successful work by masquerading as an angel of light (II Cor. 11:14, 15). All through the centuries Satan's success has come mainly through his ability to deceive.

b. They are destructive. This is suggested by their being "ravening wolves." False teachers are doing their most deadly work while pretending to be loyal to the Bible and to Jesus Christ.

3. The unfailing test (vv. 16-18). "By their fruits ye shall know them." Every tree bears its own kind of fruit. Nature is inexorable in her laws as to this. It is equally true in the spiritual world.

4. Their ultimate end (v. 19). All false teachers shall ultimately be punished by being cast into the fire. Although God has infinite patience and bears long, he will see to it that this evil work does not go on forever.

IV. The Dangers of Empty Profession (vv. 21-23).

1. Merely calling Christ "Lord" will not answer for doing his will (v. 21).

2. One may do supernatural works and still be lost (vv. 22, 23). Not all supernatural works are divine. The devil is a supernatural being. All evil doers are under his sway.

3. A coming separation from God (v. 23). One may have been a Sunday school teacher or a minister and have performed many mighty works and yet hear from Christ the awful declaration, "I never knew you: depart from me ye that work iniquity."

V. The One and Only Safe Way (vv. 24-29).

1. Hear the sayings of Christ (v. 24).

2. Do what Christ commands (vv. 24-29).

When We Are Dead

We may live when we are dead—not only, as we trust, in Heaven, but also by the impress we made in Christ's name upon others.

A Prayer

Almighty God, we open our hearts in prayer that thou lead us more into the truth as it is in Jesus. We want to serve thee in it; and we desire the days to come when the truth will be lived and followed in earth even as it is in heaven.

God's Grace

God's grace is God's love on the quest for loveless children, whose sins are scarlet and whose iniquities are red like crimson. "While we were yet sinners Christ died for us."

Expert Analyzes Causes of Life's Many Failures

While every normal man and woman strives to learn the secrets of success in life, how many pause to consider the causes of failure? Dr. Bernard Hollander, the psychologist, says the London Daily Mail, analyzed the reasons for failure while speaking at the London meeting of the South Place Ethical society. They ranged from sheer laziness and overweening ambition to the handicap of a bad marriage—the wife who is a millstone round her husband's neck.

"A man fails," said Doctor Hollander, "if his ideas are larger than his purse; if he trusts unworthy people; if he puts pleasure before duty and has too many or too expensive amusements; if he does not do today what he can possibly put off until tomorrow; and if he risks all his eggs in one basket when he is not in a position to watch or control it."

"Some men fail because they are given to dawdling, indecision, worrying or fretting, or have oversanguine expectations."

"A man is bound to fail if he has no sense of humor, lacks cordiality, does not know how to approach men, cannot take a rebuff good-naturedly, does not carry confidence or conviction, and when he is too long-winded in his conversation so that people tire before he gets to the point."

A good many failures in life, said Doctor Hollander, were due to overactive impulse, but the man whose animal nature was weak had no right to pose as virtuous, because temptation did not exist for him.

Success or failure in life depended also to a great extent upon the kind of partner in marriage.

"There is the nagging wife, the clinging wife, the domineering wife and the dull-witted wife who is something of a millstone round her husband's neck," he said.

"There is bound to be failure when an aggressive, masculine woman marries an effeminate youth; when an independent and courageous man marries a helpless, stupid woman; and an athletic, vigorous woman marries a dried-up bookworm."

"I have known girls to marry a man for such trivial reasons as that 'he dances divinely.'"

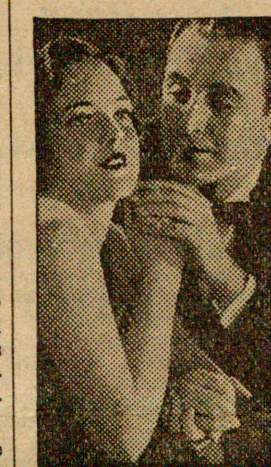

"Neither society, the state, nor humanity can continue to exist without the old-fashioned wedded couple bound together by a bond of love and affection."

Determination of Sex

About thirty years ago it was discovered that sex is determined by the male cells and this because the cells are of two different sizes. One size gives rise to female and the other to male offspring. New political and social possibilities were envisioned. Biologists began to discuss ways of separating the two sorts and thus settling beforehand whether children should be boys or girls.

Soviet science, which is particularly active and daring in biological experimentation, has announced that the two kinds of male cells have at last been separated. In animals at least, it is now possible to determine exactly what the sex of progeny will be. So said Prof. Julian Huxley recently in an address that he delivered in London. But, cautious biologist that he is, he wants confirmation before he believes it.—New York Times.

She has wandered into an unknown land.

Think of her faring on as dear
In the love of There as the love of Here;

Think of her still as the same I say,
She is not dead, she is just away.

LOVING MOTHER AND SON

Cook County

Politicians Must

'Ans. Home Rule

The leaders of the two major political parties have been making up their slates for the April primaries. And the country town citizens of Cook County have been looking on with considerably more interest than in the past few years. They are anxious to know how the prospective candidates for some of the important offices will stand on the question of Home Rule.

The Suburban Area and Country Towns Association of Cook County as an organization has made it clear from time to time that it is not a political organization. In fact, some of its leaders have found places of prominence in both the major parties. However, this does not deter them as individuals from supporting those candidates who they have reason to believe will serve the interests of the country towns citizens to the best advantage.

And those who would run to the country towns now with loud protestations of their devotion to the cause of Home Rule may expect to be asked where they have been in the past fifteen months when the Suburban Area group has been battling the Metropolitan legislation which the Chicago politicians sought to foist upon the country towns.

People have a great deal more time at present to reflect upon the affairs of the county than they had in the few years previous. And they have been kept pretty well posted on the way things are being done and the manner in which certain measures were put up in an attempt to increase the burden of their taxes.

So the men who would lead the hitherto easily duped masses in Cook County had better clear their skirts of some of the stains that have been left by their attempted inroads of the country towns. Suburban Area officials contend.

By official test made before meters are installed—and recurrent checks within specified periods—the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois attains in its meters as high standards of accuracy as the fine watchmaker who manufactured your pocket timepiece.

Before installation, every meter must pass the rigid tests of official inspectors. In the Company's laboratories meters are checked according to specifications set up by the United States Bureau of Standards. A carefully measured volume of gas is passed through the meter and it is adjusted to exact accuracy.

THE AMERICANISM PROGRAM OF THE V. F. W.

Fourth in a series of articles on the aims and purposes of the V. F. W.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U. S., is an organization of veterans who have fought under the American flag on foreign soil or in hostile waters. It is a permanent organization of citizens of this community and thousands of other communities in the country, whose peace time program is designed for service as devoted as was their armed defense of their country in its time of war. Our program comprises three principal purposes and activities—veteran rehabilitation, child welfare and Americanism.

By "Americanism" we mean "One country, one language and one flag". We also mean the development of a greater love for our own country in the hearts and minds of all its citizens. Believing that the highest type of citizenship, patriotic loyalty and zeal must be achieved thru knowledge the V. F. W. has for one of its most important activities a Department of Americanism which constantly seeks by co-operation with schools, civic groups and similar agencies to spread information and to interpret history.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States stands firmly against the activities of agents from other countries who seek to foster agitation and dissatisfaction with our government. We have no quarrel with any nation, but we who have followed Old Glory on foreign soil and in hostile waters are convinced of the necessity for keeping forever safe those principles of government on which our nation is founded and for which our forefathers fought and died. We have no place in these United States for any organization which attempts to overthrow our form of government by force or violence.

Similarly, the V. F. W. takes a firm stand against the inner forces which have developed enemies of our established government. Believing that good citizenship begins with the youth of our nation, our organization sponsors a junior program which seeks to direct the leisure activities of boys throughout the country and to provide them with wholesome recreation and interests by way of combating the inroads of crime and other vicious influences. A majority of V. F. W. Posts sponsor junior drum and bugle corps, drill teams, athletic teams and bands. Many of our units are actively engaged in Boy Scout work and it is part of the program of our national organization to promote the co-operation of our Posts with the civic activities of their respective communities.

Because of our love for our country; because we have served our country in the zone of battle where we have witnessed the horrors of bloodshed, our Americanism embraces hatred of war to a degree hard to understand by those who have not shared our experiences. We pray that this country may never again be forced to participate in another war. But we believe - we know - that an adequate national defense is our best, our only insurance against the possibilities of future wars.

It may astound you to learn that the United States of America is seventeenth among the nations of the world in the relative strength of its land forces. In view of the turbulence and uncertainty of world conditions and international relations and with full regard for the growing spirit of militarism in evidence on all sides, we have every reason to feel alarmed over the curtailed strength of our military forces. The United States ranks third among the naval powers of the world. Third, despite the fact that we have a greater national wealth than any other country; third, despite the fact that we have more far flung boundaries and resources, more trade and commerce to protect than any other nation on earth.

The Americanism program of the V. F. W. favors a national preparedness that will increase the strength of our armed forces to a degree of equality with the armed forces of any other country in the world. We advocate and demand a measure of military strength that will stand as a guarantee of safety and peace for those who are entitled to the benefits of American citizenship.

There are hundreds of thousands of small white crosses in the cemeteries of this and other countries today which bear mute and tragic testimony to the undeniable fact that only by training, only by preparedness, only by building up a national defense which will impress and warn the ambitious and covetous nations of the world, can the United States of America avert another World War within the next generation - if not before. Thousands of American boys gave their lives in France because they were thrust into battle untrained. It is that memory which makes the advocacy of a large Army, Navy and Marine Corps one of the firm principles of the V. F. W. today.

THE PICTURE

The memory of the Great Emancipator was a kind of religion to Uncle Dan and he found Billy an eager and appreciative listener whenever he chose to talk on his favorite subject.

"Abe walked twelve miles once to return ten cents to a woman customer of the store in Old Salem when he found he had given her the wrong change," related Uncle Dan.

"Why didn't he just call her on the telephone and tell her he'd give it to her next time she came in?" asked Billy.

"There were no telephones then," replied Uncle Dan. "We have many things now our grandfathers didn't have and one of the greatest of these is the telephone, especially to the farmer. It keeps us in touch with our neighbors, with the stores in town, with the fire department, the doctor and the veterinary. Those of Lincoln's day had to do without it, but we have it for only a few cents a day and we are mighty lucky."

Michigan Rotarians Establish New "Low" Mark for Service Club Flag

Above: Members of the Houghton Rotary Club holding a meeting at the bottom of the 9,000 foot shaft of the Quincy copper mine. Right: Deep in conversation with Chicago Rotarians.

When Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd flew across both the North and South Poles he carried with him a Rotary flag.

When Professor Auguste Piccard soared above Switzerland into the stratosphere he also bore with him the flag of the International Society of Rotary.

Now a Rotary flag has penetrated one and one-half miles below the earth's surface.

Make Long Distance Calls
It was the Rotarians of Houghton, Mich., who carried their flag, symbolic of a worldwide organization of service clubs, 9,000 feet down the inclined shaft of the Quincy copper mine at Hancock, Mich., recently, and then announced the feat by making what is believed to be the "deepest" long distance telephone call ever recorded.

A temporary telephone had been installed at the bottom of the shaft for the special use of the party, and two long distance calls were placed to Chicago.

Professor James Fisher, who was the retiring president of Rotary International, talked from the mine with Chesley R. Perry, the international secretary of Rotary, and Dr. W. O. Hotchkiss, President of the Michigan College of Mining and Technology, who is also chairman of the geology sub-committee of a Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago, conversed with Rufus Dawes, executive head of the Exposition.

Others Listened at Top

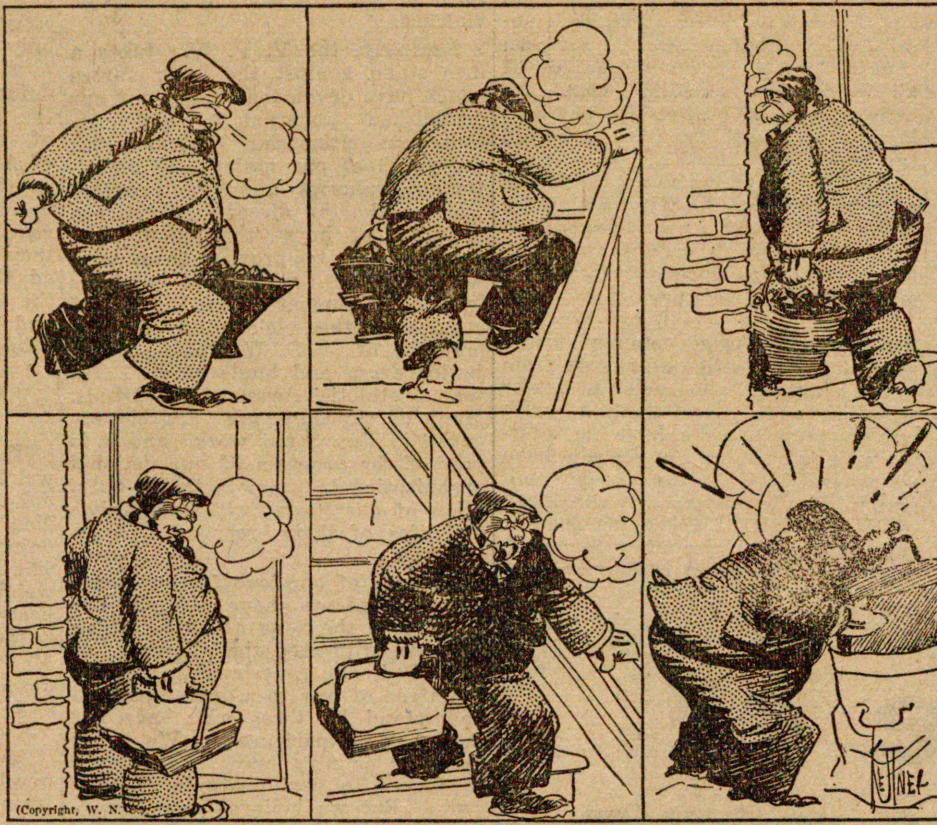

Members of the party also made local calls to their homes, while a listening set with five receivers was installed at the top of the mine shaft, so that a number of the Rotarians who did not go down into the earth nevertheless were enabled to hear the conversations.

The Quincy mine was opened in 1848 and is the oldest in operation in the Michigan copper country. For a number of years there has been a permanent telephone in operation in one of the deepest of the Calumet & Hecla shafts at Calumet, but this instrument is not as deep as the one temporarily used when the Rotarians carried their banner into the Quincy mine.

Little Carol has a pet rabbit and is very fond of it. Her daddy went hunting and brought home a wild one. In dressing it, he left a little tuft of fur on the ground. Carol came running in from play and saw it. She said:

"Why, no, Carol, we didn't. Your bunny is in his cage," mother said.
"You did so; I see some of his feathers on the ground," was the reply.—

Light on Family Tree of King Tut-Ankh-Amen

A scarab or lucky symbol which King Tut-Ankh-Amen's grandfather gave to friends attending his wedding about 1400 B. C. is announced as the most important archeological find of the season for the Haverford college expedition to Palestine.

The scarab is carved from Egyptian limestone in the shape of a beetle and measures 3 1/4 inches long and 2 1/4 inches in width. Inscriptions on the scarab trace of the genealogy of Tut-Ankh-Amen's grandmother, Queen Taly. Scientists with the expedition believe she was a "foreigner" from Phoenicia.

Dr. Elithu Grant, director of the Haverford expedition, states: "In all probability, the scarab had been placed as a magical object, having been a treasured antique for centuries in Palestine. Several marriage scarabs have been found in Egypt, but it is full of significance to find one in Palestine." The discovery points to Egyptian control of this area which, says Doctor Grant, continues to provide many suggestions of the life in the first and second Millennia B. C.—New York Times.

BEAUTY TALKS

By

MARJORIE DUNCAN

STOUT, THIN OR NORMAL?

THE beauty world is at war again—oh, not a very serious war—but just enough to make it very, very interesting. There are some that feel the whole world is reducing, others that say curves are in vogue. In fact, the latter group contends that reducing ended when the Empress Eugenie had started. Whether or not the bread and butter loaf is to replace the lettuce leaf only time will tell. Time changes, women with it, and fashion is now more fickle than the femme.

My personal opinion is that women are becoming quite, quite sane in the business of fashioning the figure. Yes, some have gone to the extreme in attempting to achieve sylph-like proportions. With the boyish, flapper form as the result. But, happily, they are comparatively few. And certain it is too that the South African type of beauty is pronounced "far too fat" by Americans.

Slender hips, and squatting to keep them trim, are still in vogue. Scrawny shoulders and chests are taking on some human flesh and better feminine form thereby.

Women will soon be the normal healthy and beautiful specimens that Nature plus Art can make them. And how is this new beauty to be achieved?

As far as the figure is concerned, there's one magic word: "exercise." More and more women are squatting and twisting and arm-swinging their figures into flattering proportions. For though chest and shoulders take on the needed padding, abdomens must remain flat and hips trim.

You can, if you wish, massage arms and shoulders with a fattening cream to encourage the rounded pads to form, or slap hip bulges into shape with camphor and alcohol solution. But in themselves these mediums cannot work magic. Only when accompanied by exercise are they resultful.

Which side are you on—stout, thin or just right happy and healthy norm?

I had a letter a few days ago from a woman who told me that her friend had reduced a great deal of weight by the thyroid gland treatments, and so she was going to have them too. The treatments may have been splendid for her friend, but that is no indication that she needs them. Only a reputable physician after a very careful physical examination should recommend and administer any glandular treatments.

EXPERT DISCUSSES ROUGE

ROUGE is such an important factor in the make-up ensemble. Used properly, in the right shade and blended cleverly it can soften hard lines, make contour defects less apparent and enhance one's natural color and sparkle and that look that says "I'm alive—and glad to be."

Properly applied rouge can make your make-up and make you more alluring, interesting. But—poorly applied, it had better be left off entirely. Before choosing your rouge decide whether you wish a liquid, cream or compact rouge. Also make sure that the color you choose is right.

There are three types of rouge—liquid, cream or paste, and dry or compact rouge. Each has its advantages. The liquid stays on longest. But it is most difficult to use.

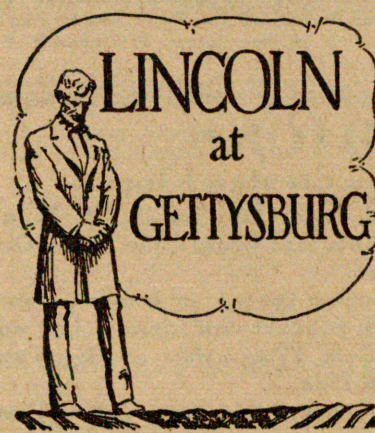

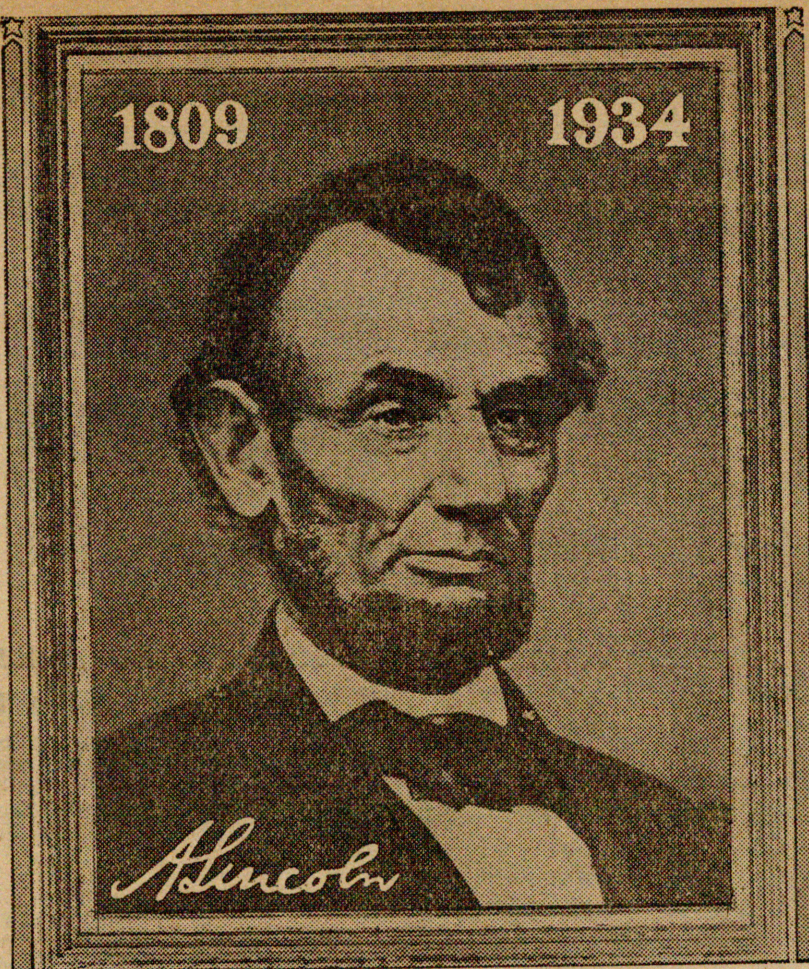

Cream or paste rouge is not drying, blends more easily than liquid rouge, and gives a warmer, "under the skin" quality that comes closest to natural color. Take a wee bit on the middle finger and dab it on near the cheek bone where your natural color is. Now blend with another finger—upward and outward along the natural color area. Remember that a little is enough. It is better to start with too little and add a bit than to start with too much and attempt to tone down the color. That is too difficult. Remember, too, that too much rouge will make the face look harder and older, just as sharp edges will. Rouge placed too low on the cheek has the same effect. Keep it hanging high. Compact rouge, with which we are all familiar, is simplest to apply—and is used to "touch up" the make-up.

Too much emphasis cannot be placed on choosing the right shade. With so many colors offered—with rouges ranging from a light coral to a deep vermilion, with make-up experts and beauty savants ready to help, there is no reason why every woman should not have her own shade of rouge. After exercising or after patting the skin with tonic you can tell where your color naturally appears, but also your own color tone.

I have found that cream rouge is easiest to blend, and gives the most natural, delicate and warm effect. Over it lightly blend powder, patting and blending. Do not rub. Then apply your lip paste or lipstick and remember that cream rouge for cheeks and make-up for lips should harmonize exactly. That is one of the important rules of make-up.

Learn the art of applying perfume. Become a devotee of the atomizer. Spray it lightly on your skin, your lingerie, the lining of your hat. Rub just a bit on the palm of your hands, touch a bit behind your ears, on your brows and lips. But always remember that just a little is enough. Also make use of the delightful perfume tricks that smart women know.

LITTLE more than seventy years ago, a gaunt, unhand-some man, whose face was careworn, and whose figure was stooped, revealing the agony that was almost smothering him, delivered a speech of only about three hundred words in length. Scarcely any attention was paid to that man or to the words that he uttered—at the time. It was because he was the nation's ruler that he had been given the opportunity to make any remarks on this occasion.

Not Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, but another man—Edward Everett—a noted orator, had been chosen as the principal speaker, and he spoke first. He held the crowd spellbound two hours and newspapers the next day devoted much space to a report of his masterly effort. Of the other man's speech most newspapers made no mention, beyond saying that he also spoke. A few of the larger papers printed what he said, but without comment.

About everybody forgot what the man who spoke two hours had said. The other man's utterance, because of its brevity and manner of delivery, began to be recalled by its hearers and for decades it has been classed among the world's literary masterpieces.

FOURSCORE and seven years ago our fathers brought forth, upon this continent, a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that "all men are created equal."

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of it as a final resting place for those who died here that the nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate—we cannot consecrate—we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have hallowed it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here; but it can never forget what they did here.

It is rather for us, the living, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work they have thus far so nobly carried on. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom and that government of the people, by the people and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

The occasion of the masterpiece of oratory and the scene was that of the dedication of the burial place for Union soldiers who died in battle—a field over which a part of the Battle of Gettysburg had raged.

It was only by chance that President Lincoln spoke at all, for had the original date chosen for the dedication been observed, it is likely that he would have pronounced only the simple formula of official dedication. The date set was October 23, but Everett advised that he could not conveniently be there then. The dedication was postponed to November 19. No invitation was sent to the President until November 2. Then he was very formally told that "Hon. Edward Everett will deliver the oration. . . . It is the desire after the oration, you, as Chief Executive of the nation, formally set apart these grounds to their sacred use by a few appropriate remarks."

With the invitation went a note from an official of the Soldiers' National Cemetery board, telling the President the writer hoped Mr. Lincoln would feel it his "duty to lay aside pressing business for a day and come to Gettysburg to perform this late sad rite to our brave soldiers." Thus the President virtually was commanded to attend a dedication ceremony that had been postponed for the convenience of another. It was rather hoped by the committee in charge of the arrangements that "Old Abe" would not attempt to make a speech. The members feared his uncouth appearance and homely vernacular would not make a good impression on the rich and cultured supporters of the cemetery project.

Lincoln seemed not to notice the slight and accepted the invitation. His anxiety was not that two weeks was too short a time in which to prepare a speech, but that uncertain train connections might cause him to be late and thus delay the dedication.

Some still are living who heard him speak, and they can have no more precious memory, observes a writer in the Washington Star. The martyred President's words have become a world classic, their immortality guaranteed by their majestic but simple beauty. Spoken for a particular moment, intended to serve but an instant's need, the nobility of both the thought and the utterance was so compelling that multitudes far removed from the original occasion feel the power of the message and respond to its appeal. No other oration of modern times has been its equal. It stands alone, an unparalleled expression of the grandeur of a master spirit, the elemental splendor of an illuminated soul.

Critics have declared that the text may be scanned, and it frequently has been printed in the typographical arrangement of poetry. To the question as to the source of its music, analysts have replied by citing the Psalms and Shakespeare, but it is not exclusively a mechanical trick of rhythm which gives it its mystic character of limpid and harmonious prose. In point of fact, the address may be explained only in terms of aspiration. It is like a fragment of opalescent sky, a flash of climbing flame, a scrap of verdant wind-swept hillside, or a mighty wave of the illimitable sea—it is dynamic as these things are, natural and authentic as the universe is. Lincoln shared with the Psalmist and the Bard of Avon the instinctive capacity, judgment and charity which are aspects of divinity, yet are deeply human.

The address, then, must have come out of the infinite, and it was America that spoke at Gettysburg. So viewed, the Emancipator's phrases signify the dedication not merely of a battlefield but of a nation. Consecration is in them, patriotism and loyalty shine from them, and love and mercy reach out through them to touch the heart of mankind.

One by one, in an unending sequence, the curtain of the ages will fall, and Lincoln and his vision will remain.

Without guile and with pure purpose, let us renew our trust in God, and go forward without fear and with manly hearts.—Abraham Lincoln.

Tragedy of Long Ago Revealed by Accident

Geologists in a newly found cave in a limestone quarry at Bishop Middleham, Durham, England, have pieced together the astonishing story of a family which perished there 400 years before Christ. There were eight people in the family, and they all used the cave as their home. The men stood well over 6 feet high. The family's milk probably came from cattle and goats, the remains of which were found near the cave. There were badgers and wolves in profusion for the men to hunt with fine bone spears. The "kitchen" was at the back of the cave. Marks of smoke on the stone show where the fire had been. The family lived happily, but they died together in the cave which had been their home. The roof collapsed without warning, and for 2,300 years their bones lay under the stone. The cave was hidden until a modern quarryman fired a shot, which revealed the entrance to it.

TELEPHONE NUMBER PROVES CLUE TO MAN'S IDENTITY

A telephone number often proves a valuable clue, and has led to the solving of many police mysteries.

Not long ago, in Philadelphia, it led to the identification of James Seam, of New York City. He had been found wandering about the city, unable to tell who he was or where he came from. Finally, at the police station where he had been taken, a detective asked him if he knew any telephone numbers. The amnesia victim replied, as surprised as they, "Luxemburg 8-2316."

Inquiry at the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia brought the prompt report that there is a New York City telephone central office by the name of Luxemburg. The number was called and the man's identity quickly established.

MR. AND MRS. J. W. DAY

The Mokena village board meeting Tuesday night was devoid of any special interest. The state engineer's office at Elgin sent maps showing what streets in the village are to be improved with crushed stone to be paid by the state out of the gas tax money due the village. The maps were found to be wrong. Most of the streets shown on the map have already been improved. The street to be improved is the one running from the Neithammer ave., intersection east of the school then by the Adam Barenz place to the road in front of the Chas. Geuther place.

Twenty automobile licenses have been sold for 1934.

Mrs. George F. Wannemacher is on the sick list.

Violet Hurley is ill with the mumps.

Marion Montgomery formerly of Mokena is ill with scarlet fever in her home in Joliet.
